

When skateboarder Rayssa Leal had her heart set on landing a challenging trick, she dressed up in her favorite blue fairy costume and practiced all day until she nailed it. When snowboarder Belle Brockhoff competed at the Olympics in Sochi, Russia where it is illegal to be gay, she refused to hide her true identity. And even though people told singer Lizzo she couldn't be a pop star because of her weight, she chose to love herself and follow her dream.

All of these amazing Rebels showed true confidence and bravery. Can you think of a time you let your confidence shine through? Maybe you raised your hand in class to answer a tricky math problem? Perhaps you learned a new song on the piano, or taught yourself to do a cartwheel? Whatever your confidence story is, write about it below!

